Oroville Dam Auxiliary Spillway Incident

- Flow from the flood control spillway will be reduced from 40,000 cubic feet per second to zero.
- As flows are reduced, DWR will monitor the status of the dam, spillways, and related structures to ensure their continued safety and stability.
- Flow to the Feather River will be reduced gradually to minimize risk to downstream levees per the Army Corps of Engineers operational requirements.
- This flow reduction in the river will be buffered by the Hyatt Powerplant, Diversion Pool, Thermalito Forebay, and the Thermalito Afterbay to a final flow of 13,000 cubic feet per second.

Per the DWR Flood Operations Center and California Data Exchange Center (CDEC) as of 04/05/17 at 0900 hours:

- Inflow: 17,149 cfs.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

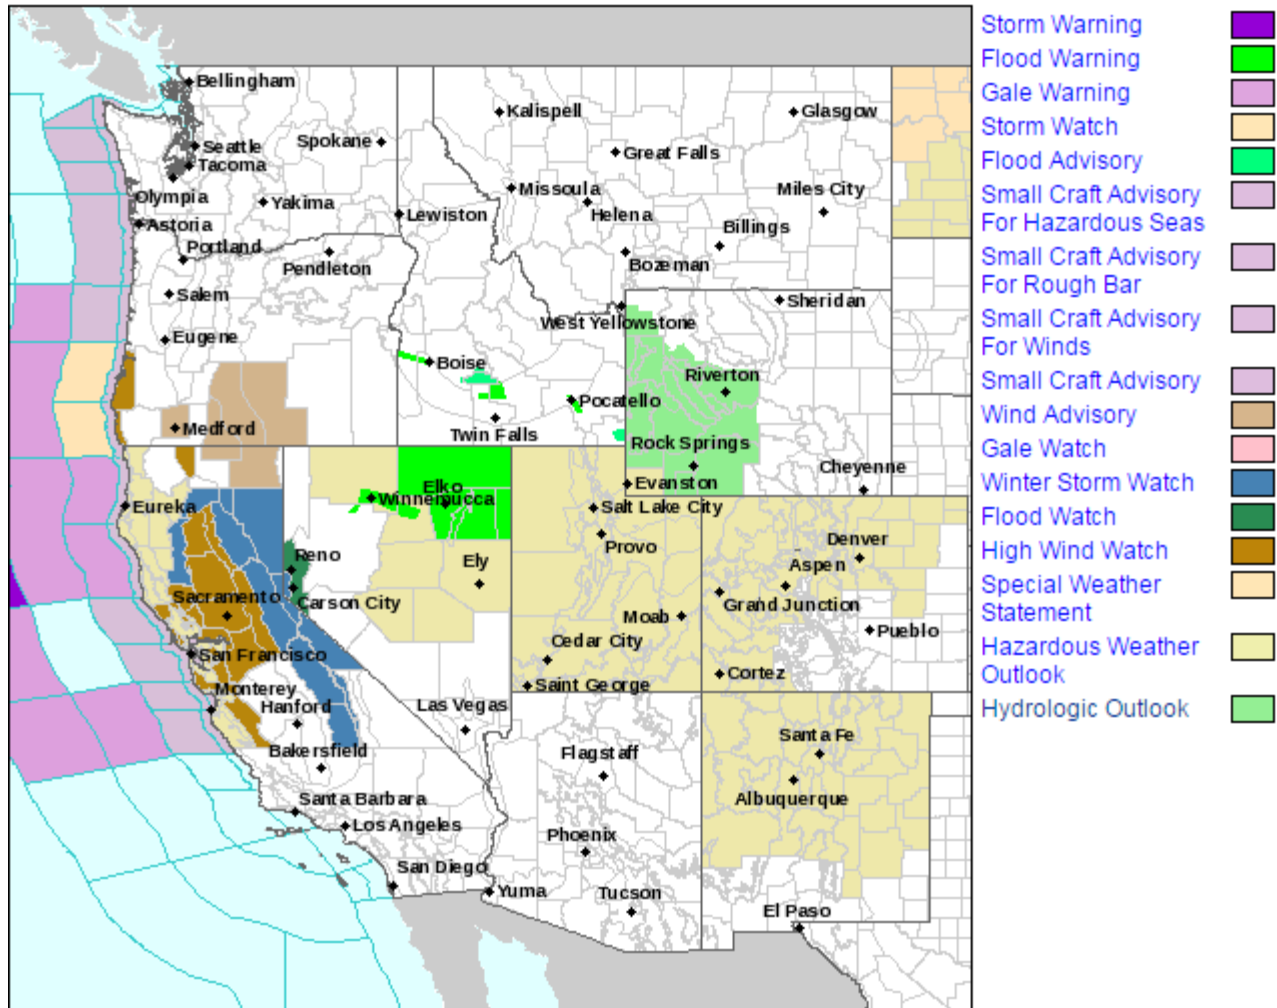

The high pressure ridge that was over Northern California earlier this week has moved off to the east. Today will be partly to mostly cloudy, dry and mild throughout the region, and S to SW winds will increase this afternoon as the next Pacific storm system approaches. Peak wind gusts will be 15-25 mph in many areas today, and 30-40 mph in the most wind-prone mountain locations. The storm system will push light rain into far northwest California tonight. The first wave of precipitation from this storm will move inland early Thursday, with only light to moderate precipitation and snow levels 5000 feet or higher. Thursday will also be windier than today, with gusts in open areas reaching 25-35 mph and 50-60 mph in the most wind-prone mountain areas. More waves of precipitation will move through Thursday night through Saturday night with moderate to heavy precipitation. Snow levels will be near 3000 feet near the Oregon state line and 5000 feet in the Tahoe reach. More waves of moderate precipitation are expected to move through Sunday night/Monday and Wednesday/Thursday. Gusty southerly winds are expected, and northern areas will receive the majority of the precipitation with each wave.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Temperatures will warm to 10 to 15 degrees above normal today as a ridge of high pressure strengthens over California. Maximum temperatures will be in the mid 60s to mid 70s across the mountains and upper 70s and 80s in the valleys. Temperatures will cool around 5 degrees Thursday as the ridge becomes centered over the Desert Southwest. Minimum humidity will be mainly between 12% and 25% away from the coastal areas through Thursday. A Pacific storm will bring significant cooling to the area Friday and Saturday. This storm will also bring showers to Central California starting Thursday evening and to Southern California starting Friday evening. Showers will end across the region Saturday afternoon. Most of Central California will receive between 1 and 4 inches of rainfall, while most of Southern California receives less than a half inch of rainfall. The snow level will initially start at around 8,000 feet and end at around 5,000 in the north and 7,000 feet in the south. South to west winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph will surface across the mountain ridges and desert passes Thursday evening through Saturday evening. A slow warming and drying trend will occur Sunday through the middle of next week as a ridge builds into California from the southwest.
